Course Description

From energy consumption to capital expenditure, HVAC related expenses account for a large portion of the operating budget in a commercial office building. Communication between HVAC service providers, building engineers, and property managers is often complicated by a lack of familiarity with the mechanical systems in the spaces they manage. This disconnect in understanding slows communication and is ultimately more costly for all parties involved. This seminar is designed to teach the basics of HVAC and prepare building managers to more effectively deal with HVAC issues in their buildings.

Key Topic Areas

- Mechanical equipment/design according to building
- Controls systems and energy consumption
- Standard maintenance practices
- Common points of failure
- Life expectancy/ Capital planning
